A Message from the Founder and CEO of Measures for Justice

Welcome,

I can't tell you how thrilled I am to see that you're All In for a more transparent, accessible, and accountable criminal justice system. At Measures for Justice, we've long known the passion and support are out there—we see it all the time—but it's heartening to begin assembling all this energy in one place.

All In is, first and foremost, a network of people who share the same vision for a criminal justice system that works for the people. It's a system we all can understand and can scrutinize with ease, and that responds to the needs of local communities.

By joining All In, you've demonstrated your commitment to making data a cornerstone of how justice gets carried out. Data that is accessible and transparent and that holds everyone accountable to principles of equity and justice. You are now a part of a community-centered network filled with peer-to-peer learning, discussions, resources, events, and, most importantly, an exchange of ideas.

We know that no two counties are alike. Cultures, histories, personalities—these all play a huge role in how a county gets to data transparency and accountability. Trading ideas and best practices is critical to the process. So, thanks for being here. And remember: this is your network. Start today by jumping into the conversation, exploring the resources, making a connection, and let's make this place something meaningful together.

Thanks for joining us,

Amy Bach
Chief Executive Officer

All In is a common ground dedicated to advancing data transparency, accessibility, and accountability in the criminal justice system.

We're so happy you're here.

The All In Network unites diverse professionals and advocates committed to criminal justice reform through data and collaboration.

Like you, each member brings unique perspectives and expertise to our collective efforts. As a member of All In you'll also meet:

- Criminal Justice Practitioners

Prosecutors, police, and other legal professionals dedicated to seeking justice, protecting society, and advocating for victims.

- Community Based Partners

Members of community-based organizations, nonprofit leaders, policymakers, and other community members committed to reshaping the criminal justice system.

- Community Advisory Board (CAB) Members

Passionate advocates actively working together with their local criminal justice practitioners to bring data transparency to their communities through Commons, a public-facing data platform.

- Academics Professionals

Researchers, educators, faculty and other professionals utilizing evidence-based research to make criminal justice systems and individual cases more fair, efficient, impartial, and effective.

The All In Network allows you to collaborate to understand data, increase access to data, and promote data transparency. Collectively, we're working together to increase accountability in the criminal justice system.

Our Approach

Over the past decade, we've discovered that high-quality data can drive transparency and accountability when community members are informed and empowered. Connecting people who care about data-driven accountability and enabling them to connect is crucial. The All In Network is a conduit for community stakeholders, criminal justice practitioners, and advocates to advance and commit to data-driven criminal justice reform.

By fostering deep connections and facilitating meaningful dialogue, we aim to expand awareness about the power of data and learn from communities focused on data-driven change.

Building a nationwide network allows us to achieve more together than we can alone, cultivating a community of leaders for sustainable progress.

We've learned that communities are equipped to lead themselves, understand their nuances, and promote effective, sustainable solutions. Meaningful engagement happens when we build trust-based relationships within communities, recognizing that this takes time and intentionality. Community members must be involved in decision-making processes that impact them to ensure their voices are heard.

Agencies often face challenges in engaging with their communities while managing other tasks. The All In Network shares best practices to help agencies better engage with community members. Breaking down silos fosters collaboration and effective data sharing among stakeholders. Cross-regional learning between prosecutors, police chiefs, and community members enhances this collaboration.

As a member of the All In Network, you'll have exclusive access to:

Resources

Best practices, toolkits, data standards, and more. Whether you're a criminal justice practitioner looking to improve your agency's data quality, an academic professional seeking access to data, or a community advocate wondering the best way to use data to start a conversation about change, All In offers something for everyone.

Education

Our aim is to share our expertise so you can bring new ideas to the work you do everyday.

Understanding how to use the criminal justice data that's available to you is a crucial first step in data-driven change. All In offers education on data literacy so you can lead and navigate data-driven conversations with confidence.

Events

Meet up virtually or in person. All In offers webinars with leading experts in Community Engagement, Data Science, and Criminology. It also advertises local, in-person events where you can connect with others around various criminal justice topics that interest you, including workshops, documentary screenings, and town halls.

Peer-to-Peer Learning Opportunities

Connect and learn from other members of All In. This is where the magic really happens. All In offers opportunities to meet and learn from others who are facing—or have solved—the same data-related challenges as you! You'll have opportunities to seek guidance, share successes, and collectively take your ideas to the next level.

Who is Measures for Justice?

All In was created by the team at Measures for Justice. We're a non-partisan, non-profit organization committed to helping communities, including the institutions that serve them, reshape how the criminal justice system works using high-quality data.

Our work began back in 2011, and since then, we've established ourselves as the leading experts in utilizing high-quality criminal justice data, developing comprehensive system-wide measures, building state-of-the-art data platforms, and engaging communities in data-driven change.

Today, we work closely with local communities—including prosecutors, courts, police, and members of the public—to make high-quality criminal justice data transparent and accessible, leading to greater system accountability.
